18 An Exceptional Program Marks 20 Years of Excellence

From 11 students to 75, Tullidge to the state-of-the-art PEG Center, Director Tee Garrison to Elizabeth Connell, the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted celebrates its 20th anniversary — still the only program of its kind in the nation.

20 Capstone Festival: Celebrating Student Learning and Achievement

Mary Baldwin celebrates its first Capstone Festival, revisiting a bygone tradition of sharing knowledge with the college community and beyond, before students graduate.

22 Global Citizenship Focused in New Peace Minor

Peacemaking and conflict resolution, the newest academic minor at Mary Baldwin, launches in fall 2006. What impact would it have had on Elizabeth May's '06 independent major in Holocaust studies or will it have on Burmese student Aye Htut's life and academic experience?

26 Charlotte Jackson Berry '51 Defines Civic Engagement

"We didn't use to talk about international volunteerism, but that is the imperative today," says Charlotte Jackson Berry '51, Mary Baldwin's honored Commencement speaker. She talked the talk — civic engagement — because she walks the walk.

In Celebration and Remembrance, WWIL MARCHES PROUD

Governor Tim Kaine's inauguration in January marked the first time a Virginia governor took the oath of office in the Commonwealth's colonial capitol of Williamsburg since Thomas Jefferson was inaugurated in 1779. It also marked the third invitation for MBC's Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership (VWIL) to perform in a Virginia gubernatorial parade. Cadets and non-cadet students in the MBC/VWIL Band processed down Duke of Gloucester Street in a parade that was televised around the state.

The combined band and corps also made its third consecutive appearance in the St. Patrick's Day Parade in New York City March 17. Mary Baldwin College students in full parade dress commanded attention from the moment they turned onto Fifth Avenue, and held it for more than 40 city blocks. WWIL earned its way onto the national stage by capturing second place among all marching units during its first appearance in the NYC parade in 2004. It is not yet known where the group placed in the 2006 competition.

The corps paused between its annual spring parade and its military ball March 25 to honor Air Force 1st Lt. Sarah Small '02, who died while on duty in Egypt. As snow fell, her parents, WWIL alumnae, and military dignitaries joined the corps of cadets to dedicate a plaque in her name and position it on the memorial wall outside the SMA/VWIL Museum on campus, where Staunton Military Academy alumni, faculty, and staff are also remembered with plaques. Small is the first WWIL graduate to be killed in the line of duty. Anita Blair, deputy assistant secretary of the Navy, and Robert Goodwin, deputy assistant secretary of the Air Force, spoke to attendees at the ceremony and ball.

Evidence of the depth of feeling for Sarah Small was also clear in a poignant memorial service held by Mary Baldwin College last October, followed by cadets and others attending her burial at Arlington National Cemetery in December. WWIL cadets have also remembered Small with a painted rock outside the WWIL House on campus. Contributions sent to Mary Baldwin in her name may be used to establish an award scholarship for a WWIL senior who is involved in community service. ▲

Award-Winning Writer, Bear Expert, and Noted Scientist Expand Our Minds

Each year, annual lecture series funded by generous MBC donors bring lively and talented visitors to campus. During spring 2006, esteemed guests enriched the MBC experience as part of the Elizabeth Kirkpatrick Doenges Visiting Scholar/Artist program, the Mary E. Humphreys Biology Lecture Series, and the Phi Beta Kappa Visiting Scholar series, among others.

Writer Francine Prose and Artist/Activist Claudia Bernardi

As the 2005–06 Doenges Visiting Artist, Francine Prose, author of 14 books of fiction including Household Saints and A Changed Man, gave a public reading and taught a May Term course, Reading Like a Writer. Prose, a Brooklyn native and graduate of Radcliffe College, left Harvard graduate school to live in India for a year where she began to write her first novel, Judah the Pious.

Francine Prose

In addition to novels, Prose has penned stories, reviews, cultural criticisms, and essays appearing in such publications as The New Yorker, The New York Times, Atlantic Monthly, Art News, Elle, The Paris Review, Harpers Magazine, and The Wall Street Journal. She is also the author of several children's books and three books of translation.

Prose is the recipient of numerous grants and awards, among them Guggenheim and Fulbright fellowships, and has taught at Harvard, University of Arizona, and University of Utah, among others. Her novel Blue Angel was a finalist for the National Book Award and her nonfiction work The Lives of the Muses: Nine Women and the Artists They Inspired was a national bestseller.

Artist Claudia Bernardi is slated to be the 2006–07 Elizabeth Kirkpatrick Doenges Visiting Artist. Her experiences exhuming bodies, documenting burial sites, and championing social justice and human rights in Central and South America and Africa invariably inform her art. Bernardi's paintings, prints, installations, and sculptures are internationally known. One of her unique media is fresco on paper, a method she developed, whereby layer after layer of pure pigments are applied to wet paper and run repeatedly — sometimes hundreds of times — through a printmaker's press. Bernardi will be at MBC September 18–22 to visit classes and for a public lecture September 19. She will return to campus during May Term 2007.

Claudia Bernardi

The Elizabeth Kirkpatrick Doenges Visiting Artist/Scholar program was the vision of the late MBC alumna and trustee Liddy Kirkpatrick Doenges '63. The lecture series was established in 1996 by her friends, family, and classmates to honor her memory.

Bear Biologist Michael Pelton

Michael Pelton, one of the most respected bear biologists in the world, shared his research methods and findings from 38 years of field work — and tactile pieces including skulls and fur. Among Pelton's most important accomplishments is a 32-year study of the black bear — the longest continuous study of any bear species in the world. Pelton's research projects have also included studies of brown bear in Spain, Norway, and Russia, and Asiatic black bears in Japan. He has studied giant pandas in China in a cooperative effort with the Wildlife Conservation Society and Memphis Zoo.

Michael Pelton

Pelton is professor emeritus of wildlife science at University of Tennessee, and he has also held faculty and adjunct faculty appointments in graduate programs for ecology and ethology at the Universities of Arkansas, Clemson, and Mississippi State. He has co-founded numbers of organizations dedicated to the conservation and rehabilitation of bears, such as the International Association for Bear Research and Management and the Black Bear Conservation Committee, among others.

The Mary E. Humphreys Biology Lecture Series was established in 1992 to bring prominent scientists to the campus to present public lectures. Sponsoring the series are friends and former students of Dr. Mary Humphreys, professor emerita of biology, who served on the biology faculty at MBC for 25 years (1943–1968).

Sue Rosser's Scientific Glass Ceiling for Women

Beakers. Microscope slides. Test tubes. Ceilings. All things that are made of glass for women conducting scientific research, according to Sue Rosser, Phi Beta Kappa lecturer. Rosser is dean of Ivan Allen College of Liberal Arts (part of Georgia Institute of Technology), and a former faculty member at MBC. She discussed the implications of women and the glass ceiling in science at the annual college lecture.

Sue Rosser

Rosser has written several books and numerous articles on gender inequality in science education and professions, and she received a Women of Distinction Award from the Women's Leadership Conference in 2004. She is a staunch advocate for the feminist perspective in science, and her nine books include Female-Friendly Science, and, her latest, The Science Glass Ceiling: Academic Women Scientists and the Struggle to Succeed. The lecture is sponsored by the campus chapter of Phi Beta Kappa. ▲

Gen Ed Revision and QEP Topic Approved

Mary Baldwin College had not made major changes to its General Education requirements in more than 20 years. That changed in February, when faculty approved curriculum revisions.

The process started nearly four years ago with the question: "What are we trying to do?" said Jeffrey Buller, vice president for academic affairs and dean of the college. The understanding was that the curriculum was sound and could remain unchanged. However, following numerous public sessions, listserv discussions, and revisions, the changes to the general education plan now fully complement the college's strategic plan.

The final discussion was timed to coincide with selection of a Quality Enhancement Plan topic — as well as better serve students in a global context. The alterations will apply to students who enter MBC in fall 2006. To better understand the revision process, please refer to chart below.

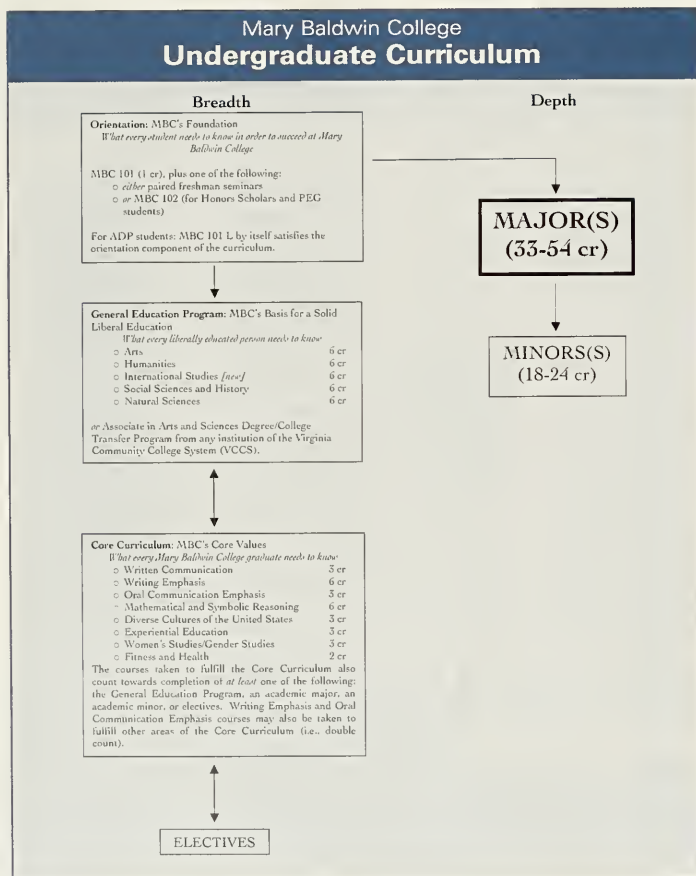

At the same meeting, faculty unanimously endorsed civic engagement as the focus of the college's QEP — shorthand for Quality Enhancement Plan. Implementing a successful QEP is one of the requirements MBC must meet to retain its accreditation by the Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association (SACS), a process which is underway and will take several years.

"We live in a world of increasing complexity and interconnectedness, and the dangers of ignoring that interconnectedness are growing rapidly," read the proposal by a committee of faculty members, recommending civic engagement as a top priority. Civic engagement synthesizes several of the five original topics proposed for the QEP earlier in the year, and it is a hot topic at many colleges and universities.

A concise illustration of the varied parts of the concept can be given through an extended metaphor that uses the hand and fingers to represent civic engagement. At the most basic level, it symbolizes how our hands extend to help others. Through this extension, we grow and gain. Bruce Dorries, assistant professor of communication, offered this explanation to the faculty:

- ▲ Pinky: The weakest digit, representing a lack of knowledge of world issues and global citizenship. This has been a major concern of faculty, not only at Mary Baldwin, but around the country. Civic engagement can strengthen students' global awareness.
- ▲ Ring finger: Convincing students to marry a man named "Stan Ton." In other words, involvement in the Staunton community, including, but not limited to, supporting local businesses, participating in the arts, internships, and volunteerism.
- ▲ Middle finger: The subject of social entrepreneurship — regarded as taboo in some realms of academia — has broad support from students because it calls for applied use of creative thinking and skills. Around the world, social entrepreneurs have used the savvy and drive of the business world to support educational, health, and environmental initiatives.
- ▲ Index finger: The pointing image of "Uncle Sam wants you," can be used to symbolize how faculty, staff, mentors, and families can point out to students their roles and responsibilities as citizens in a democracy. Voting is a good start, and students will be enriched by realizing that they can be activists for social change.
- ▲ Thumb: None of the other fingers is of much use without an opposable thumb, and neither are the other components of civic engagement without a strong basis in service to the community. ▲

Dean Buller and Professor Sandra McClain Bid the College Farewell

Jeffrey Buller, vice president for academic affairs and dean of the college at Mary Baldwin for the past five years, announced he will depart from the college at the end of the academic year in June 2006 to assume another educational leadership position. Buller will serve as dean of the Harriet L. Wilkes Honors College and professor of history at Florida Atlantic University (FAU). Buller's wife, Sandra McClain, adjunct associate professor of music, has accepted a full-time position as professor of music at FAU's main campus in Boca Raton.

"Dean Buller has been an outstanding colleague and friend," said MBC President Pamela Fox, telling the college community of the dean's departure. "His quick wit and keen intelligence inspire us all."

The husband-and-wife team contributed much to Mary Baldwin College during their tenures. Buller led undergraduate curriculum reform, initiated a faculty salary improvement plan, and co-authored the 10-year strategic plan, Composing Our Future. He served as a role model with continued contributions in the classroom, as a publishing scholar, and as an entertaining speaker who presented at conferences around the globe. McClain guided many talented voice students and offered her vocal flair to the community in performances.

A search committee recently began the task of identifying an interim dean of the college and vice president for academic affairs.

Fulbright Awards Honor Recipients, Benefit MBC

Vladimir Garkov, associate professor of chemistry, earned a Fulbright award to continue a project he started during a recent sabbatical in Spain. He will work to publish a chemistry textbook, for use by students at MBC and at other institutions, which blends the American liberal arts approach to education and the traditional model used in Bulgaria. He is working with colleagues at Bulgaria's University of Sophia to incorporate student-centered inquiry activities into lecture-based instruction, and to connect chemistry with environmental, societal, cultural, and humanistic aspects of science.

Daniel Métraux, professor of Asian studies, earned a Fulbright award that will help Mary Baldwin College expand its Asian studies curriculum and course offerings to include more study of China. Métraux will travel to several cities in China this summer with scholars from around the United States to experience the country's culture and history.

Best Wishes Go with Faculty Moving on

With appreciation for their work, Mary Baldwin College will bid adieu to several faculty members at the end of the 2005-06 academic year: (dates in parentheses represent each person's starting year at MBC)

Jean Donovan, associate professor of political science and health care administration (1992), accepted a position as dean of the school of nursing and allied health at J. Sargeant Reynolds Community College in Richmond.

Tom Kaplan, assistant professor of business administration (2002), will join Bondstone Ventures, a real estate development firm in Charlottesville, in project management.

Ed Petkus, associate professor of business administration (2002), accepted a position as associate professor of marketing at Ramapo College of New Jersey in Mahwah.

Now After Much Hard Work — A Life of Leisure?

Four staff members were honored for their contributions to MBC before retiring this year: Dreama Brown, associate budget coordinator (1977)

Judy Métraux, director of international programs and services (1988)

Tom Wiseman, mailroom assistant (1987)

Notable Achievements

Alice Araujo, associate professor of communication, and Andreas Anastasiou, assistant professor of psychology, gave a presentation at the National Communication Association conference in Boston. The topic: "Women, men, and the enemy other: Gender and the communication of empathy toward perceived adversarial groups."

Darryl Helems, Master of Arts in Teaching adjunct, and teaching partner Amanda Gibson wrote an article, "Embracing Multiple Intelligences Techniques with Gifted Students in the Classroom," published in Virginia Journal of Education.

Kenneth W. Keller, professor of history, authored an article, "Medicine as Cultural Baggage in the Ulster-Scots Settlements of the Valley of Virginia," that appeared in Familia—Ulster Genealogical Review. The magazine is printed in Ireland by the Ulster Historical Foundation.

Daniel Métraux, professor of Asian studies, received the 2006-07 Karl F. and Patricia H. Menk Award for Faculty Support and Development, which he will employ during his sabbatical in fall 2006. The award will allow him to travel to Japan to conduct research for articles and a lecture he has been commissioned to create. He will write an article about the significance of former President Ulysses S. Grant's 1879 trip to Japan, and another about Japanese religion for the magazine Education About Asia. In October, he is slated to deliver an address on Americans in Japan in the 1800s at the Conference on Democracy and Religion in Asia at the University of Washington.

Sharon Spalding, professor of physical education and exercise specialist for Virginia Women's Institute of Leadership, was quoted on KPHO radio in Phoenix and in Better Homes and Gardens. The topic was "Getting Started on Fitness."

The Office of Communication, Marketing, and Public Affairs earned three awards as part of the Council for Advancement of and Support of Education (CASE) District III 2005 Awards. Director of Design Gretchen Newman and Assistant Director of Design Theresa Rollison received an Award of Excellence for the President's Tea invitation and Rollison a Special Merit for the Spring Fling invitation. Newman, Associate Vice President for Communication, Marketing, and Public Affairs Crista Cabe, and Director of Communication Carol Larson received an Award of Excellence in the direct mail category for a series of Admissions materials.

Ward Balances Directorship of ADP and Its BRCC Office

Marion Ward thought, after serving MBC as assistant dean of students, director of residence life, adjunct instructor of women's studies, academic advisor in the Adult Degree Program (ADP), and director of an ADP regional center during the past 17 years, that her list of titles was complete. She was wrong. Beginning in January, Ward added director of ADP — the entire statewide network — to her Mary Baldwin résumé. Still working as director of the ADP's center at Blue Ridge Community College (BRCC), Ward spends about 60 percent of her time as director in Staunton and the other 40 percent managing the office at Blue Ridge.

"I was able to move into this position and feel very natural because of the other roles I've had at Mary Baldwin," Ward said. She finds countless ways as ADP director to use the experience she gained in other MBC positions, such as advising, counseling, and handling unique student issues.

Ward's appointment marks the first time the Adult Degree Program has had both a director and a dean of adult and graduate studies to oversee all the programs, and she is genuinely excited to be part of ADP's evolution. When Shelia Tolley, former director of operations for adult and graduate studies, left MBC in fall 2005, the administrative office was slightly reorganized to allow for a director who would oversee ADP central staff, review students' degree plans, and mentor ADP advisors, among other duties.

Although continuing in her role at BRCC is a scheduling challenge, Ward admits that it was her decision to do both jobs. "I love what I do there, particularly advising students, and I wanted to protect the continuity of how that center runs. Sue Schmeissing was promoted to full-time assistant director at BRCC to help us keep up with growing numbers," she said. Ward enjoys working with one of the oldest and most respected adult degree programs in the country and hopes she can help ADP run efficiently and seamlessly from student, to advisor, to professor, to administrator.

"The more efficient we are here, the better we support growth of the program and the better we serve our students," she said. ▲

The Woods and Joneses Lead an Increasingly Active Parents Association

The Parents Association has undergone some positive changes that will allow parents greater opportunity for support and engagement with MBC. The Parents Council has renamed itself and will be known as the Executive Committee of Parents Association. Every parent of a current Mary Baldwin student is a member of the Parents Association.

The Executive Committee, in conjunction with the Alumnae/i and Parent Relations Office, has been busy this year hosting gatherings for families in different geographical areas of the country and supporting admissions efforts. For information about activities and ways to become involved, parents may go online to: www.mbc.edu/parents/.

The current Executive Committee of the Parents Association is co-chaired by Bill and Wendy Wood and Harry and Allison Jones. Committee members are Carolyn Lucado Austin, Brenda Baker, John Cochran, Marianne and Ed Ferreol, Dorothy Eddis and Lowell Hott, Annie and Michael McAlexander, Edith Shelley, Ernestine and George Sledd, Rita and Charlie TenBroeck, Judy and Jeffrey Jorgensen, and Fred Banister. ▲

New Alumnae/i Class Leadership

As students in the residential college, they may have served in student government, or led a student organization, or not. Regardless of previous student leadership positions, as alumnae/i, they are now leading their classes in supporting the college and its strategic plan.

Dozens were called on by the Alumnae/i Association Board of Directors to participate in Mary Baldwin College's inaugural Class Leadership Council April 21–23. In addition to receiving an update from MBC President Pamela Fox and members of the college's executive staff, and touring the campus, they elected class officers to lead Reunion programming and to solicit class and individual gifts for the college. Eventually, the Alumnae/i Board would like to have in place a system where officers are elected every five years — at Reunion — to keep classmates engaged with MBC by setting up mini-reunions, gathering information for class columns (formerly known as class notes in the magazine you are reading), and maintaining contact with the college about significant events. The Institutional Advancement team supports the Alumnae/i Board's efforts and is providing logistical support.

"As our strategic plan unfolds, Mary Baldwin's success requires the participation, engagement, and support of our alumnae/i," college leaders said in a letter to selected alumnae/i this spring. "Those colleges that are doing well are the ones that have a class leadership structure. We believe that the results of this new initiative will help position Mary Baldwin College as a national leader in liberal arts education."

The class leadership program is being piloted this year with alumnae/i who graduated in class years that end in 2, 3, 7, or 8. ▲

Book. Book. Book. Our Libraries Expand with Works by Our Own

RETROSPECT: The Tyson Years 1985–2003

Mary Baldwin College has just published Retrospect: The Tyson Years 1985–2003 by Patricia Menk, professor emerita of history. The result of two years' work, the book details the challenges, innovations, and successes of the college during the long tenure of its eighth president, Cynthia Haldenby Tyson.

Menk thought she had written her last book about Mary Baldwin's history when she completed To Live in Time, a comprehensive history published in 1992 for the college sesquicentennial. She thought the new book would be a continuation of history rather than a biography of its president. However, as she quotes MBC Dean of the College Emeritus James Lott in the book, "It is unusual in modern higher education to see a college president serve as long as Cynthia has. And those years have not been particularly easy ones for the college or its president." Thus, Menk picked up her pen again at the behest of the college's Board of Trustees to write specifically about the Tyson years.

The book, in 10 sections and 116 pages, was heralded at book-signings for faculty, staff, alumnae/i, and friends of the college on April 6. That evening Drs. Tyson and Menk were feted at dinner in their honor with the board of trustees.

Menk also noted in the preface of Retrospect that she was "grateful to the board of trustees for authorizing the writing of the book and in particular to Pamela Fox, the present president of Mary Baldwin College, who so generously gave her time and understanding. She, too, is a remarkable woman."

Retrospect: The Tyson Years 1985–2003 is on sale for $18 in the college's Alumnae/i Association Gift Shop, Mary Baldwin Bookstore, and at The Bookstack in downtown Staunton.

The Essential Department Chair

Yet another book from the Mary Baldwin family — this one the beginning of a series of books — has been published: The Essential Department Chair, A Practical Guide to College

Administration by

Jeffrey Buller, vice president of academic affairs and dean of the college. "This is the book I never intended to write," said Buller. Based on a series of workshops he presented for faculty and administrative development, he wrote an article and submitted it to the quarterly journal The Department Chair. After several subsequent articles, Anker Publishers took note and asked Buller to expand the articles into a book.

The day the book went to press, Anker requested another one, which will be 48 chapters long and titled The Essential Academic Dean to be published within the coming year. The Essential Department Chair is on sale at Amazon.com and other booksellers.

Staunton's Newtown: Portrait of a Historic District

"How would you like to be co-authors on my next book?" That was one of the first questions posed by Katharine Brown, adjunct professor of history, in her Historic Preservation class in 2005. Brown has taught the course at Mary Baldwin

College for close to 25 years. She realized her students had written quite a bit about the city's history — particularly of the Newtown District, which is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. Their final project requires them to research a building and write it up as if they were writing a nomination narrative for a listing on the National Register of Historic Places. That stack of student papers was incarnated in her latest book, Staunton's Newtown: Portrait of a Historic District.

"It was a lot of fun working with student papers and adding my own narrative to fill in parts here and there," Brown said. She counted about 28 student papers used in the book, including those from students in the Class of 2005 and from previous years back to 1985, all of whom are credited in the manuscript.

More than 250 photographs, maps, and drawings throughout the book help illustrate the story from Newtown's formation in 1787 to its recent rediscovery and revival. Staunton's Newtown is available at the MBC Bookstore, The Bookstack in Staunton, and from Lot's Wife Publishing, of which Brown is a co-founder. ▲

and
of
 GALLERY

A special place to showcase artistic work by students, faculty, and professionals — and the intern who makes it happen.

By Dawn Medley

TAKE A PEEK into the 50x30-foot space on the first floor of Lyda B. Hunt Dining Hall one month and you might glimpse the work of an acclaimed artist such as Milo Russell, Joan Gaustad, or Chica Teney. Come back another month, and you could see the yet-undiscovered talent of Mary Baldwin College students. At another time, you might find an intriguing exhibit of work by professors such as Paul Ryan, Anne Hanger, and Jim Sconyers.

This is the beauty and the simplicity of Hunt Gallery. Student, faculty, alumnae, and other professional work has been shown alternately in the same white-walled, checkerboard-floored arena since 1983. Prior to that, formal art displays were essentially homeless, according to College Archivist William Pollard. The art department was housed on the ground floor of Martha Grafton Library when it opened in 1960, and art was largely displayed in the rooms and corridors of that building. The practice of displaying a few pieces lingered until a few years ago, Pollard said. In keeping with the tradition of displaying art in Grafton, a room with glass doors on the main level of the library was recently set up by Jim Sconyers, assistant professor of photography, as a small printmaking and photography gallery.

The art department, and most of its art, moved to Bertie Murphy Deming Fine Arts Center when the college purchased it as part of the former Staunton Military Academy campus in the mid-1970s. Department offices, studios, and classrooms are located there today, and the hallway space on the first floor is designated as Deming Alternative Gallery for displaying student work.

More than just a place to hang or display art, as the primary on-campus gallery, Hunt is a classroom, an opportunity to interact with practicing artists, a community arena for ideas, and student preparation for the "real world" of exhibiting, Ryan said. "The gallery also provides internship opportunities every year, which has proven valuable for students who go on to graduate school and for others in their professional work."

Natural light from a wall of southwest-facing windows, plaster walls, and lack of climate control are continual challenges for arranging shows in Hunt Gallery, but Ryan said it has two distinct advantages: its location at the center of campus and its compact size. "The space is exhibition-friendly and flexible for different types of shows. Through [MBC President] Dr. Fox's long-range planning, we are working to alleviate some of its issues," he said.

An upgraded gallery would open up creative possibilities. Adding climate control would make it possible to accommodate historical shows, and other updates could help bring contemporary shows that involve fragile or sensitive materials, or those which require sophisticated video monitors, digital projectors, or computers, Ryan said.

Gallery intern Melissa Baldwin '06 knows the eccentricities and charms of MBC's showcase room as well as anyone. During a full year of work — most students intern for one semester — she has helped set up nearly a dozen shows, contacted artists, written press releases and artist bios, and is working to catalog more than 10 years of previous shows.

"I had been attending gallery openings since my freshman year, but I didn't realize there was an opportunity for student involvement for a while," said Baldwin, a double major in studio art and art history, and a painter herself. "I am thrilled to have the position now. Every show is different, and it's enlightening to talk to the artists before their shows, and then meet them."

Melissa Baldwin '06

Aside from helping set up monthly displays, Baldwin's primary project has been to organize slides, pictures, artist information, and correspondence back to 1992, when Ryan started teaching at MBC. She has created hard-copy files for each artist that will allow people to find pictures, exhibit dates, and artist information in a snap.

In early spring, Baldwin — the intern who kept busy organizing other artists' shows — was preparing to set up her own. She was humbled by the thought that her name would join the list of the year's exhibitors, some who have done shows nationally and internationally.

Diane Line is a movie music junkie. She admits that most of her CD collection is movie soundtracks. But she's not talking about the frivolous scores of Scary Movie or Romy & Michelle's High School Reunion. Those that stir her are soundtracks such as The Patriot, Kaiders of the Lost Ark, and Lord of the Rings.

"I can't say I've ever gone to a movie just to hear the soundtrack, but I have missed parts of the action because I've had my eyes closed to listen to the music," she said.

Line's passion for inspired movie music serves her well in her dual role at Mary Baldwin College. As a student in the Adult Degree Program majoring in music and as director of the MBC/VWIL marching band, music is basically her life. In her office on the second floor of the house occupied by the Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership on the Staunton campus, books for her senior thesis on Mozart's Requiem and courses in history and American literature share space with pictures of her tuning up with Mary Baldwin cadets and marching in the Ohio State University band.

"Mary Baldwin has probably been the single greatest thing to happen in my life — from my first conversation with my advisor, Lallon Pond [associate professor of business administration], I knew it was right," she said.

After a hiatus from higher education of nearly 25 years, Line returned to the classroom as a music history major at MBC in January 2005. Less than a month later, she was working as director of the college's marching band, which had just started to incorporate non-VWIL students. A month after that, she was on a charter bus with the band, headed for New York City and the group's most heralded performance — as part of that city's annual St. Patrick's Day Parade.

Things continue to move fast. In preparation for graduation in May, Line balanced 18 credit hours — including a senior thesis — with early morning rehearsals, weekly evening section practice, staff meetings, and performances in parades on campus and off, including a second trip to NYC. Seldom boastful, she is proud to acknowledge that she has maintained a 3.76 overall GPA.

Line grew up in southwestern Ohio, outside Cincinnati, where her mother was a professional musician who played flute in city and regional symphonies and tutored students in the instrument. Line started taking piano lessons at age seven, and by 14 she was playing the French horn in public appearances. "Music was everywhere in my house," she said.

Line was a music education major at Ohio State University in 1981 when she joined the Air Force and chose to serve in the band. She was stationed at Langley Air Force Base in Hampton Roads, Virginia, and traveled frequently in Virginia, North Carolina, and Maryland for band performances as a French horn player. Line compares playing in a military band to the work of a public relations officer; in fact, band units are organized as part of the public relations function of the armed forces, and are intended to build morale and recruit members, Line explained. As the MBC/VWIL band grows, Line hopes it will serve that purpose at MBC.

"There are so many opportunities for the role of the band to expand," she said, citing the potential for performances at sporting events and college-wide activities such as Apple Day.

The band is currently composed of about 40 students, nine of whom are not in VWIL. Band Director Line and Brigadier General Michael Bissell, commandant of cadets, are working toward a 60-member band that would include about 30 non-cadet students, but its success isn't strictly measured in numbers.

"We have been given freedom to try new things, like non-military marches," said Line, who even figured out a way to sneak one of her favorite movie pieces, composer John Williams' majestic theme from The Patriot, into the line-up. "The things I'm learning in class about mid-to-late-19th-century music are the basis for many of the sweeping musical scores in movies. Those pieces work well for the band, too," she said.

The Lexington Christmas Parade in 2005 brought about Line's proudest moment with the MBC/VWIL Band. "It was Lexington at night, and they looked so sharp when they did a half turn and played in front of the judges' stand. I was overwhelmed," said Line. The unit won best marching band in the parade — beating Virginia Military Institute on its home turf for the fourth time.

Her unique position as an ADP student and a faculty member carries more benefits than just being able to park almost anywhere on campus. She has recruited fellow classmates to join the band, and she enjoys interacting with band members in class and around campus, beyond rehearsals. Line plans to continue as band director after graduation, and she will have more time to give private lessons — which she has done for several years — and play with the Harrisonburg/Rockingham County Concert Band near her home in Massanutten, Virginia.

"I truly believe there's more to come from the band, and I plan to see it through," she said. ▲

An Exceptional Celebration:

TWENTY YEARS AGO they numbered just 11. Today their average is 75. Back then they lived in Tullidge Residence Hall. Today they reside in a state-of-the-art facility on the former site of Bailey Residence Hall.

What has stayed the same in the 20-year history of the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted (PEG) at Mary Baldwin College is the commitment to give extraordinary young women the chance to fulfill their academic potential earlier in life. For the last two decades PEG, still the only residential program of its kind in the nation, has given academically gifted high school-age women the opportunity to begin college one to four years early.

On March 31 PEG celebrated its 20-year milestone, welcoming back former students, staff, and directors, including alumnae dating back to the charter class.

"It's cool to see people who have done this before," said Nakita Hanson '06.

Christine "Tee" Garrison, the first director of PEG, shared slides and anecdotes of the early days of the program. "These were bright, capable kids who were bored in their schools," she told the crowd. "At Mary Baldwin they were in a group of intellectual peers and could feel good about themselves."

Celeste Rhodes, former director and executive director of PEG, also spoke of the challenges and victories. Rhodes thanked the earliest alumnae who had come on "a wing and a prayer" and their families for having the courage to send their daughters to such a new program. One of her key goals was achieved when then-President Cynthia Haldenby Tyson wrote a letter to the Malone Family Foundation articulating the college's long-term commitment to PEG.

Razel Solow, director of PEG research, and her associate, Emma Leed Branch '05, presented highlights from their research study funded by the Malone Family Foundation and conducted over the past three years. Solow received a contract for her book Lives of Purpose, which will detail findings from the study. The book will look at PEG graduates and examine five in depth, covering topics like popular misconceptions about gifted individuals. It is likely to be published near the end of 2007. Research for the project was begun by Rhodes, who retired due to illness but remains a consultant.

Four current PEG students discussed their work mentoring local elementary and middle school students in two area schools: McSwain Elementary and Stuart Hall. Pia Adolphsen '09, Samantha Smith '09, Joanna Bischoff '09, and Emily Mindrebo '09 have advised students on Battle of the Books, a reading program, as well as Passion Projects, a task in which students pursue interests ranging from volcanoes to an original Claymation film, and a geodesic dome made of newspaper.

Six former PEG students spoke of their experiences in the program as well as life after PEG. The alumnae panel included Dori Akerman '92, Diana Ballard '91, Rose Chu Beck '92, Damaris Christensen '90, Mary Rebekah Cox Hadfield '92, and Anne Byford '89. They regaled the crowd with tales of what it's like to be the youngest person in your first job after college and how fortunate it is to make mistakes early in life with extra time to explore options.

Elizabeth Connell '92, current director of PEG, summed up the feeling of many in attendance at the reunion. "It's a place where young women come to develop who they are," she said. "And who they can be." ▲

Student Ingenuity Showcased at First Capstone Festival

By Dawn Medley

Some colleges and universities don't offer it. Others do, but students have to make a point of asking for it. At Mary Baldwin College and very few other institutions, it is a requirement.

"It" is a significant, original research or creative project by undergraduates — as the culminating effort of a student's senior year at MBC. The senior thesis is part of a group of activities that get students ready for life after college. Recently termed the Capstone Experience, it is a vital component of the Mary Baldwin College Advantage. It is not only innovative, it is inspiring.

"It gives you a feeling of esteem — more than if you had just completed coursework," said senior Nakita Hanson, who finished her project in spring semester. Her thesis examined why Americans are drowning in debt at a younger age. "For me, it represented closure of my undergraduate years and gave me confidence that I have learned the work ethic and skills to do what will be necessary to write graduate papers or a dissertation."

Topics are as varied as MBC students' backgrounds and imaginations. Hanson's was one of an elite group nominated for a new event this year, the Capstone Festival, that showcased exceptional senior projects for the entire college community during May Term. A quick survey of the list of entries on page 21 gives a glimpse of the intellectual diversity students display in any given year. The first Capstone Festival was held May 3 in celebration of authentic academic achievement.

The process each senior goes through demonstrates MBC's faith in its students' abilities and inventiveness. Although the process differs slightly among disciplines, a few things are constant and clear: Students propose and develop their topic; they conduct experiments, interviews, and research; they present their projects in a public forum; and they defend their work for an audience of peers, professors, and guests. With the Capstone Festival a reality, a select number of students go one step beyond the normal process to present their work at the festival.

Paul Callo, assistant professor of biology, said the range of topics often pushes professors outside their comfort zones, too. He advised four projects this year, which included a survey of blood parasites in Hooded Warbler populations, a study conducted in Idaho of the influence of hunting pressure on habitat selection in ducks, and the effect of a common brand of weed killer on tadpole development.

The journey from inspiration to presentation of one of Callo's advisees, Kira Cherrix, provides a model of the senior project process. At an individual advising session in March, outfitted with her Dell Inspiron laptop, Cherrix got down to business updating the professor about the data her mice produced. She brought up graphs and spreadsheets showing their calorie consumption, weight, and carbon dioxide and oxygen production, and spoke with confidence about her findings and next steps. How did she get from the kernel of an idea to this point, and where would it go from there?

Cherrix's study started with a clean slate. Some academic departments at MBC guide student projects by setting an overall topic that students work within. Biology majors can design almost any research they choose — as long as it can be conducted at the college or an approved off-site location. Her original idea was to determine if there is a correlation between blood types and hypoglycemia, but human subjects are off-limits at MBC. Cherrix moved on to other mammals and remembered a question that had come up at a friend's senior thesis defense at Mary Baldwin the previous year. Cherrix's friend had not been able to go back into the lab to answer an inquiry about how artificial sweeteners affect the metabolic rate and calorie intake of mice. Cherrix decided she would continue the study, building on the foundation laid by the alumna.

When the topic was set, the mice arrived, 21 of them. During the four-week experimentation period, Cherrix learned to deal with live subjects, and she was grateful there was no need to revise her original thesis. The penultimate step was writing a substantial paper — made a bit easier for Cherrix because her research seemed to be showing the effect she anticipated. As the college intended, the paper tied together many parts of her studies at MBC, reaching beyond biology. Then, like her friend the year before, she defended her research and conclusions with a presentation to professors, classmates, and other interested people. She was asked pointed questions and needed to think on her feet.

Interestingly, results and data are often not the only, or even the major, aspect on which professors judge student performance. "We are at least as interested, if not more interested, in how you deal with the obstacles in your research — how you redesign or get around them — as we are in the data," said Lundy Pentz, associate professor of biology, to students in a mid-semester biology senior seminar class. "The goal is that you have the experience of research. Making a wonderful discovery is an added benefit."

But Cherrix was not nervous. In fact, the process was old hat for her, as she had already written and delivered a senior thesis in history the previous semester. She also earned a Capstone Festival nomination for that work about the effects of nuclear testing on the people and environment of Nevada. She's planning to use and expand on it for graduate school entrance essays.

"The [Capstone] festival will, I think, motivate people to do well on their senior projects so they can be part of it. You put so much effort into your thesis and it's rewarding to have others recognize that," Cherrix said.

While still in the midst of her biology project, Cherrix presented her history thesis at the regional meeting of Phi Alpha Theta, the national history honor society, in Lexington, Virginia. Her paper earned second prize in the American history undergraduate section, and she'll receive an award and certificate from the national organization.

Cherrix's advice for not sweating the senior project: "Start early ... as early as you're comfortable. Enjoy it. It's the last thing you'll do here. It will be your legacy." ▲

GLOBAL CITIZENSHIP

A Major Minor Undertaking

Conflict. It can be as petty as siblings fighting over who gets to play with a video game first — or as tragic as the tension between Arabs and Israelis that has led to the loss of thousands of lives. Peace. The easy part is knowing you want it. A new minor dealing with such issues debuts at Mary Baldwin College in fall 2006.

By Dawn Medley

The college's new minor in peacemaking and conflict resolution responds to growing concern about how to encourage peaceful solutions to conflicts that rage around the globe. The program will provide the world with a few more people each year who are educated in peace studies, said Roderic Owen, professor of philosophy and coordinator of the minor.

"It's one type of academic response to the college's focus on global citizenship in a diverse world. Part of understanding diversity is to learn how cultures and religions deal with conflict and unrest," said Owen.

Mary Baldwin's commitment to promoting cross-cultural understanding is well established. During the 1970s, studies were focused primarily on Western philosophical thought and Judeo/Christian religion, as they were at most philosophy and religion programs at American colleges and universities. The addition of Asian studies at MBC in the early 1980s signaled an expansion in course offerings, and philosophy and religion was one of the first departments to extend its curriculum as well. The two departments have a close relationship, sharing several courses and working together on new initiatives.

Philosophy and religion again demonstrated its desire for diverse studies by spearheading the creation of a minor in African American studies nearly a decade ago. The department's strength continues to reside in its collaboration with other academic departments at MBC, and its ability to make connections with pertinent local and global issues. The addition of a second interdisciplinary minor under the philosophy/religion umbrella is further testament to that collaboration. Peacemaking and conflict resolution will include three required courses — nine hours — that cover communication, psychology, philosophy, and religion fundamentals. An additional nine hours can be chosen from a broad range of courses in subjects from anthropology to sociology. Three hours of internship credit round out the program. The minor's only new course, taught by Owen, will focus on Ghandi's life and teachings.

Owen has been contemplating the idea of a peace studies program for nearly a decade, and now the elements are in place for the college to support it, he said. The addition of faculty members in communication, psychology, and sociology, and new course offerings collegewide that study relationships between races, cultures, and genders, while emphasizing service, create an environment where peace studies can flourish.

Mahala Burn '07, biology major and religion minor, said several of the courses she has taken have been rooted in intercultural and interfaith understanding. "Faith, Life, and Service allowed students of many faiths to connect and speak of spiritual issues in an academic setting," she said. "Science and Religion addressed the conflict between the faith in the divine and faith in scientific law, and offered possible resolutions."

The peacemaking minor also connects with MBC's new General Education program (followed by all students), as well as an emerging international body of research and practice focused on mediation, peacemaking, and nonviolent conflict

Philosophy/Religion: A Combination That Works

A single department that houses philosophy and religion is a bit of an anomaly, even at a small, liberal arts college, explained Owen. "Most colleges and universities separate the two into distinct disciplines," he said.

So why has MBC retained a combined department? Its full-time faculty has dual interests in both philosophical and religious theories and practice. Professor of Religion James Gilman holds degrees in both divinity and philosophy. Professor of Philosophy and Assistant Dean of the College Edward Scott, who holds a PhD in philosophy, is also pastor of Allen Chapel AME in Staunton. Owen studied philosophy and religion at the undergraduate level, focused his graduate studies in ethics, and completed his doctoral studies by analyzing the moral and spiritual development of college students. Almost all faculty in the department have social, political, and personal commitments to mediation as well. Gilman is a certified mediator, and both he and Owen actively support mediation services through the regional Community Mediation Center, which helps citizens and organizations reach creative, harmonious solutions before involving the legal system.

The full-time faculty is rounded out with four professors who instruct some philosophy and religion courses in addition to other campus responsibilities. Several professors from other disciplines, whose courses are cross-listed in the academic catalog, and a number of adjunct professors complete the lineup.

Philosophy and religion's position as a single discipline allows for smooth cooperation with other departments and for support of collegewide goals. Students have the opportunity to choose a major in philosophy, or religion, or a combination of the two. Minors in philosophy, religion, and ministry are also offered. The department works with other disciplines on community outreach efforts, such as the annual Martin Luther King Jr. March for Peace and Justice, the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges Ethics Bowl, the college's chapter of Habitat for Humanity, and newly emerging community service and service learning opportunities.

resolution. There is a growing interest in understanding cross-cultural and multicultural group interaction at the college and in the larger community. More than 250 similar undergraduate programs exist around the country, and MBC's will look at peacemaking from religious and secular viewpoints in local, regional, and global contexts, Owen said.

Students who complete the minor will be prepared to enter graduate programs in the field. Among the professional options for those who study the discipline are working at peace centers around the world, writing policy for government agencies, and using principles of conflict resolution in almost any field.

Jessica Carrigo '09 was full of questions after hearing about the minor for the first time, but she quickly started thinking about how well it would fit into her educational plans. "I'm really interested in the course on Gandhi," said Carrigo, who is leaning toward a major in psychology. "I'd also like to explore the psychological components of peacemaking, like, is the ability to create peaceful solutions linked to certain parts of the brain?"

The new minor will further complement the Mary Baldwin College Advantage by encouraging community service, internships, and international education opportunities. It will also enhance Quest, an MBC signature program that encourages spiritual growth through community service, coursework, discussion, and co-curricular activities. Burn said her membership in Quest, which is directed by college chaplain,

Rev. Patricia Hunt, encourages her to be "more understanding and open-minded."

McCall Carter '07 was one of a few students who learned about the minor in its early stages in spring 2006. "My dream job is to work for the United Nations," said Carter, a philosophy and political science major. "Focusing my efforts to study peacemaking and complete this minor will benefit me immensely in a role in that organization."

MBC's initiative to create a peacemaking and conflict resolution minor responds to student and faculty interest, and it reflects well on the college, Carter said. "It is an important subject today because U.S. foreign policy is heavy on the military side. The country and the world could use more people who are aware of alternative solutions." ▲

A Global Perspective: 'It's Up to Me ...' Says May '06

Elizabeth May '06 says the seeds for her desire to study acts of genocide — primarily those perpetrated during the Holocaust — were planted early in her life by her humanitarian parents. Her childhood was spent among Native Americans in North Carolina where her father worked as an Indian Health Service pharmacist at Cherokee Indian Hospital. Although she realizes, looking back at pictures of birthday parties and sports teams, that she was the ethnic minority in that area, she never once felt singled out because of it. The unconditional acceptance May felt growing up makes events like the Holocaust all the more unbelievable and horrendous to her.

May started at Mary Baldwin as a psychology major, but soon realized her interest in humanity grew out of curiosity about persecution and survival. With her academic advisor Daniel Stuhlsatz, assistant professor of sociology, she developed an independent major in Holocaust and genocide studies. May combined many of the disciplines and elements that would later come together in MBC's new minor in

A Global Perspective: Htut Appreciates '... So Many Freedoms'

"When you come from a place like I do, though, you really appreciate the government and the peace here. You have so many freedoms and can make your voices heard without punishment. I have the advantage of knowing how important that is."

"It has been a long journey," said Aye Htut, referring to her college education. Htut, 28, graduated from high school in her native Burma — now called Union of Myanmar — 10 years ago, and she recently finished her first semester at Mary Baldwin College.

Political instability and frequent university closures in her home country forced her to seek higher education in Singapore, where she attended classes at no cost for three years in exchange for her commitment to work in that country for the next three years. Her family's circumstances finally improved enough to allow her to come to the United States for education a few years ago, and she enrolled at California State University. MBC is her fourth — and, she hopes, final — step toward earning an undergraduate degree that has taken nearly a dozen years and spanned three countries.

The state of political unrest in Burma, a country controlled by military regimes since 1962, is no secret. In 1988, counter-government uprisings sparked violent retorts by authorities, and Htut's family was not spared in the ongoing strife. During her childhood, her father was repeatedly jailed for supposed government opposition and came close to dying in prison before he was permanently released.

Htut found Mary Baldwin through alumna and fellow Burmese native Lin Lin Aung '03, who worked with Htut's mother in Bangkok, Thailand.

She is living in a residence hall on campus for the first time in her undergraduate career and enjoys the cultural exchange that seems to come so easily for other MBC students. Htut believes that anything the college does to encourage that exchange, as well as ways that learning about other cultures can lead to peace, is a move in the right direction.

"It's human nature to complain, especially about politics and government, and, of course, that includes people in America," Htut said. "When you come from a place like I do, though, you really appreciate the government and the peace here. You have so many freedoms and can make your voices heard without punishment. I have the advantage of knowing how important that is."

Htut would like to attend graduate school after Mary Baldwin to prepare herself for a return to Burma. "I am one of many people hoping for change for the better in my country. When that time comes, we want to be ready to return and offer our skills to our people," she said.

peacemaking and conflict resolution.

"I want to understand how a person can kill another person with a clear conscience or commit other horrendous crimes, and still go home at night, tuck in the children, and be able to sleep. It's up to me, and the other people who study this history, to figure out how that happens and stop it from repeating," May said.

Tapping into courses in psychology, sociology, history, marketing communication, philosophy and religion, and political science, May's major is truly interdisciplinary.

Her professors' expertise and guidance have helped her create independent study courses — classes that she organizes with professors one-on-one — such as Sociological Impact of the Nuremberg Laws, and Nazi Propaganda.

As a junior, May attended the national Peacemakers Training Institute, sponsored by the Fellowship of Reconciliation in Pennsylvania. The group of students from across the country covered difficult issues, such as poverty, industry, politics, treatment of migrant workers, and food production in an effort to examine peace, May said. With the creation of the minor in peacemaking, Professor Roderic Owen hopes to nominate at least one Mary Baldwin student each year for that conference. In spring 2006, May interned with the Human Rights Campaign in Washington DC, continuing her exposure to ideas about how inequality leads to conflict.

"I can think of nothing more important than instruction in learning how to live harmoniously," she said.

Her civic engagement began in childhood — she collected dimes for the American Red Cross and raised $13 for the children's milk charity fund. It was only a matter of time before she took on ever greater roles in community service.

When Charlotte Jackson Berry '51 "talked the talk" about civic service as Mary Baldwin College's 2006 Commencement speaker May 21, the audience was assured that she has also "walked the walk." She spoke about the reality of community activism and volunteerism in a way that only one, who has connected deeply with the topic, can. She grew up in a family that believed helping others was part of life, and her own service started early. Her whole life's work was all the preparation she needed for this — her second — Mary Baldwin Commencement address.

"In 1989, I spoke at Mary Baldwin's Commencement about women's struggle between being a career woman or a homemaker. My advice was to do what makes you happy and is the most benefit to those around you," said Berry.

"Women's roles have changed, as we expected they would, but my advice still holds true and applies directly to volunteerism, too. There is a growing movement that, no matter what other decisions one makes in life, he or she should give back with their time, talents, and treasures," she said.

First as Charlotte Marshall Jackson (her maiden name), then as Charlotte Jackson Lunsford (the name of her first husband, who passed away in 1980), and now as Charlotte Jackson Berry (the name of her current husband, also an active volunteer), she continues to blaze a path of inspiring community service. She was recently in Moldova — a poor Eastern European country that was formerly part of the Soviet Union — to aid grassroots volunteer organizations.

It was a different Mary Baldwin College when Charlotte Marshall Jackson commenced in 1951. Students in that decade climbed the same steep hills as today's students, but in loafers and ankle socks instead of platforms or flip-flops. They played bridge in The Club and attended Book Teas at the library in lieu of hearing comedians in the Nuthouse or seeing current movies in Francis (with free popcorn). However, young Charlotte Jackson's goal of serving the world around her is shared by many students at Mary Baldwin today.

"The scenario is much more global now. We didn't used to talk about international volunteerism, but that is the imperative today," Berry said. "Students are encouraged to think about service not only as an activity, but also as an academic experience."

Charlotte Jackson was a tireless student. From the 1951 Bluestocking yearbook, one learns that she was from Memphis, Tennessee, and a candidate for a bachelor of arts in psychology. The book also reveals that, in addition to being May Queen, she was head of house in Rose Terrace, and a member of the Student Government Association's executive committee and Student Council. She belonged to several athletic groups, including Dolphin Club (promoting swimming), Monogram Club (sports participation and sportsmanship), swimming, basketball, Athletic Association, and YWCA committee. Not surprisingly, she was listed in Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities.

After graduation, Jackson put her degree to work in the field of mental health. For the only child of a wealthy real estate developer, it was an awakening to see how people with mental illness were stigmatized. Her memory of watching patients through slats in door windows of isolation rooms refuses to fade.

Soon after she married Dr. Lewis Lunsford, a cardiologist, they moved to Asheville, North Carolina where she would begin her work as a passionate and committed volunteer. During the next 12 years, Charlotte Lunsford gave her time and energy to United Way, Asheville Symphony, Pisgah Girl Scout Council, and numerous other organizations. Although she has lived elsewhere for many years, she has not lost touch with Asheville and was awarded a lifetime achievement award by United Way many years after she left the area. She was also named Woman of the Year in 1981 in Asheville in recognition of her community activism.

She amassed a list of "firsts" that speak to her success: first woman board member for Wachovia Bank in North Carolina, first woman president of Asheville's United Way, first woman to receive the Asheville Chamber of Commerce Big "A" Award for community service, and first female chair of the Asheville Country Day School Board of Trustees.

Mrs. Lunsford lost her first husband in 1980. She continued her work, accepting ever greater civic leadership roles until becoming the national chairwoman of volunteers for American Red Cross in 1986. That position took her across the United States and abroad, earned her the respect and admiration of so many, including that organization's president, Elizabeth Dole — and introduced her to volunteer Joe Berry, an attorney and the man she would marry in 1991. They moved to Columbia, South Carolina.

Berry in 1951

By then the consummate volunteer, Mrs. Berry's impact swept into Columbia while she worked through the years for more than 40 nonprofit organizations in her city of residence and beyond. She earned the highest national recognition for volunteer service in American Red Cross — the Harriman Award — and was selected as Humanitarian of the Year by United Way in Columbia, among countless awards.

Her loyalty, love, and dedication to Mary Baldwin College have been steady and instrumental. Berry was president of the Mary Baldwin College Alumnae/i Association from 1960 to 1962. She accepted a position on the college's Advisory Board of Visitors in 1973, and in 1976 she became an MBC trustee, a position she held until last year and will resume in July 2006. In 1982, she was honored for her distinguished service to alumnae with the Emily Smith Medallion, and she received the Sesquicentennial Medallion in 1992. She used her considerable fundraising skills as a volunteer in Mary Baldwin's New Dimensions Campaign and Sesquicentennial Campaign, and was co-chair of the record-breaking Leadership Initiative.

She came happily — which seems her constant state of being — to share her views about civic engagement on Commencement Day 2006. To those who know her, Charlotte Marshall Jackson Lunsford Berry, mother, grandmother, wife, humanitarian, philanthropist, is the very definition of civic engagement.

"I am delighted to be speaking on this topic. It lends itself to so many avenues and opportunities for graduates, all students, and, frankly, each of us," she said.

It may be irony or simple coincidence, but many people must be happy Berry did not take literally the message of her Commencement speaker in 1951. At that ceremony, Marten ten Hoor, dean at University of Alabama, urged students to focus on self-improvement before helping others, or "education for privacy," as he referred to it.

Gracefully, gratefully, and ever full of charm, Charlotte Marshall Jackson Lunsford Berry has made selfless actions one of the highest forms of self-improvement. ▲

VWIL Commissioning Ceremony

Over 40 percent of VWIL graduates accept a commission in the armed forces to serve in the Air Force, Army, Marines, Navy, and Coast Guard. The commissioning ceremony represents the culmination of four years of academic and physical work as students are officially recognized as new members in the armed forces. Dozens gathered to witness cadets receive their commissions May 20 on Page Terrace.

VWIL Change of Command Review

The achievements of Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership graduates were saluted as they passed their sabers to next year's seniors. The event took place on the marching field May 20 and included a full parade by the nation's only all-female cadet corps and the MBC/VWIL Band, which includes cadets and non-cadet students.

Charlotte Berry '51 L.H.D.

One of the highlights of Commencement 2006 was the awarding of a Doctor of Humane Letters to speaker Charlotte Jackson Berry '51. With honorary degrees given only rarely at Mary Baldwin, Berry is in good company with the most recent recipients Dame Judi Dench, renowned British screen and stage actress, and Claire "Yum" Lewis Arnold '69, former chair of board of trustees at MBC and a prominent businesswoman. Mary Baldwin College salutes you, Charlotte Berry '51 L.H.D. (honoris causa)!

FYI: The first honorary doctorate was awarded in the 1470s to Lionel Woodville by the University of Oxford. He would go on to become Bishop of Salisbury.

As Mary Baldwin College Is Now

Mary Baldwin's history began in 1842 when Rufus Bailey opened the doors of Augusta Female Seminary. The foundation of the institution's campus was set in the summer months of 1844 with construction of the Administration Building. Its elegant Greek Revival style set an enduring architectural tone and, then to now, it has served as the heart and center of MBC history and tradition. This map reveals the Mary Baldwin College of today, as it has grown from that first building over a period of 162 years.

As Mary Baldwin College Could Be

As Mary Baldwin looks toward its bicentennial in 2042, the college must create its future. A strategy for transformation of the college, the students, and the campus was designed and named Composing Our Future. That plan is well under way with the rollout of the MBC Advantage for students set for fall 2006, and consistent progress on all other initiatives. We asked Phillip Renfrow and John Wittmann of Geier Brown Renfrow Architects to help us envision a campus that "fit" our history and tradition on "these hills where beauty dwells.*" This map illustrates a compelling vision for transforming our campus.

Vision of a Connected Campus Guides Master Plan

Mary Baldwin College's vision of a transformed environment — one that balances practical realities with a compelling vision of the future — is here, in the form of a campus master plan. In the days and weeks ahead, more people will learn about the intricacies of the plan, which is intended to carry MBC through its bicentennial in 2042. And members of the Mary Baldwin community — alumnae/i, faculty, staff, and students — will be its ambassadors, each equipped with a blend of facts, personal experiences, and visionary ideas. Explaining this rich, comprehensive plan will require concentration, but it will also be motivating.

Information about the plan, Transforming Our Environment 1842–2042, has emerged from several sources. The MBC Board of Trustees endorsed the plan, with minor changes, in February. The complete plan was added to the MBC Web site March 6, and can be viewed at www.mbc.edu/strategic_plan/docs/master-plan06.asp. Authored by Phillip Renfrow and John Wittmann of Geier Brown Renfrow Architects based on months of consultation with college personnel, it is visually appealing, well-structured, and, at 38 pages, fairly concise.

Yes, the document is written. But the process of transforming the campus has barely begun. As is made clear in the document itself, “there is a great deal of work ahead.” The college now has a guide for creating a physical environment that will support academic, social, and spiritual goals. The plan is bold, but not so staggering that it is unreachable, even if the final product does not end up mirroring the proposal.

“One of the campus master plan’s strengths is that it is in keeping with Mary Baldwin College’s character. As the college’s goals and funding change and evolve, the master plan will be re-evaluated along the way,” said MBC President Pamela Fox. “Discussion with faculty, staff, students, and MBC advisory groups went into creating the plan, and we will all be called on again to make it a reality.”

An Environment to Match Our Strategy

Before discussing the plan in more detail, it is helpful to understand how this plan fits Mary Baldwin. The blueprint for physical changes to the college is inseparable from the college’s strategic plan, Composing Our Future, unveiled in fall 2004. While the strategic initiative Renew Our Environment has an obvious connection to the physical environment, all five initiatives are central to the campus master plan. Revisiting the other four outlines some of the renovations, new buildings, and site features that are proposed.

■ Make personal transformation a priority

The campus master plan helps the college achieve this initiative through a connected series of gardens, lawns, and paths creating a more pedestrian-focused campus and providing small, private spaces for reflection and study. An athletics and wellness center encourages physical health. Highlighting the symbolic and sacred stature of Cannon Hill and the Hunt cupola fosters connection to the college’s history and traditions.

■ Enhance academic excellence

New classrooms in the current Student Activities Center building, proposed renovations to Deming Fine Arts Center, and the construction or acquisition of a performing arts center will expand academic space and offer specialized work and showcase areas.

■ Unite and enrich our community

Campus entrances become more visible and accessible, inviting community participation in college events. The centerpiece of the plan is a student activities core — anchored by a sizeable campus green, a multi-purpose student activities center, and an addition at the back of Hunt Dining Hall — providing space for gathering and interaction.

■ Fund our future

Outstanding facilities and campus environment are of vital importance to help fulfill the measures that define success in the strategic plan — to recruit selectively and retain extensively. The visionary concepts in this plan will also enable the college to attract financial support to secure its future.

Proposed new construction and dramatic landscaping are undeniably alluring components of the plan, but President Fox cautions that continuing smaller, incremental changes — like those made in summer 2005 — will help the college reach its goals, too. "To accomplish this large transformation, we have to keep our eyes on the smaller projects," she said. Fox and the architects emphasize maximizing the potential of existing buildings and outdoor spaces before planning large-scale construction. A few suggestions for modest short-term improvements include a café in the greenhouse attached to Pearce Science Center, a library reading terrace, and upgrades to Spencer and Woodson residence halls.

One Vision, A Unified Campus

One overarching purpose emerges from the history, diagrams, and suggestions that fill the pages of the campus master plan — to physically connect the segmented MBC grounds. "What you have currently looks, on paper, like two distinct campuses separated by an expanse of roads and parking lots," Wittmann said, explaining the plan to MBC constituents last fall. Looking more closely, the college has four areas — historic campus, Cannon Hill, upper campus, and athletic campus — that need to be united to function as one, the plan states.

"Creating a unified campus will support personal transformation within an inclusive community," Dr. Fox said.

Some of the plan's proposed projects accomplish unification on a physical level. Parking lots will be relocated to the campus perimeter (with a net increase of 30 spaces). Walking paths will replace some roads, and roads will be added in other areas. A campus loop trail will encircle an area from the back of Hunt Dining Hall to the far end of the soccer field. As improvements are made to existing facilities and new ones are built, they will be made accessible in accordance with Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) standards.

Other changes will create a mental feeling of connectedness. Relocating some classrooms to upper campus in the Student Activities Center (the old Staunton Military Academy Mess Hall) will encourage travel from one section to another as part of students' routines. Green space, trees, and gardens between upper and lower campus will make the journey more inviting. More centers for activity and student housing will enliven the area outside the historic campus district. Elevation changes will be minimized as much as possible.

Phase III of the campus master plan is already underway. It includes the development of more detailed vignettes and conceptual drawings of specific buildings and landscape areas. There will also be further study of the feasibility of various options for spaces for the performing and visual arts. This work will help the college prioritize projects and develop a strategy for fundraising.

Undoubtedly, questions will be raised, and some will have to remain unanswered for the present. In the meantime, the campus master plan provides the details that the college community needs in order to say: "Just watch — this campus will be transformed."

Questions

A new campus master plan has been announced. The first drawings are printed — outlining what is and what could be. It is clear the plan has evolved in sync with the strategic plan, Composing Our Future. The next steps require a return to the proverbial drawing board: priorities must be defined, timetables established, projects refined, costs determined, and funds must be in hand before we proceed with each project ... all of which lead to questions, lots of questions. Among the college community's first questions were:

- What principles will guide these processes?
- What project(s) may be done first?
- What major change might students most enjoy?
- What is the most spectacular change identified in the plan?

What Principles Will Guide Decisions for the Campus Master Plan?

Embedded in the campus master plan is a theme that repeats: "The Mary Baldwin College Campus Master Plan must balance practical realities with a compelling vision of the future." The plan is intended as a vision that will guide the college community's ongoing discussion about the future development of the campus. The plan complements the strategic plan, Composing Our Future, which proposes five strategic initiatives:

- Make Personal Transformation a Priority
- Enhance Academic Excellence
- Unite and Enrich Our Community
- Renew Our Environment
- Fund Our Future

At first glance, the campus master plan fits neatly into the initiative to Renew Our Environment, but looking deeper, one can see how the campus master plan is critical to achieving all five of the strategic plan's mandates. In fact, the campus master plan's stated vision is: "To transform our environment, create a unified campus to support personal transformation within an inclusive community."

The text of the campus master plan also states: "In developing campus environments, we seek to compose them in their own time and their own place." These principles will guide the process of campus transformation over the next 40 years:

■ Instill Pride

The strategic plan sets the goal to reduce or eliminate deferred maintenance. It is clear that the physical condition of the campus has an impact on overall morale. This goes beyond the appearance of the buildings and grounds. It involves ongoing frustration with the limitations imposed by existing facilities on academic, cultural, community, and wellness programming.

■ Defrag MBC Community

While much of the campus exists in the small close-knit environment of the historic campus, certain groups and functions are isolated and remote. There are also few places and few opportunities where all campus constituencies can come together as a single unit. The campus needs to offer and encourage greater opportunity for casual interactions as well as planned community events.

■ Accommodate Growth

The strategic plan calls for growth in both the Residential College for Women (RCW) and the Adult Degree Program (ADP). Adequate facility resources need to be provided to support this growth. There is a general consensus on campus that an improved physical environment will assist in recruitment and retention of students.

■ Preserve Intimacy

The strategic plan identifies personal interaction among faculty, staff, and students as one of the college's core strengths. On the existing campus, there are numerous interior and exterior places that embody this strength. The campus needs to reinforce this sense of a personalized education experience.

■ Make Connections

Mary Baldwin College needs to be an integral component of the Staunton community. The campus needs to offer and encourage greater opportunity for the Staunton community to take advantage of MBC as a social, cultural, and intellectual resource. The campus also needs to better connect to the regional and global higher education community.

What's First?

IMAGINE. You are a student returning to Mary Baldwin College in the fall. The leaves have not yet begun to turn colors; the weather is still summertime-warm. There it is: you see the campus on the hillside, surrounded by the grand vistas you often take for granted during the academic year — but now, not having seen them for several months, your eyes roam the horizon, taking in the Blue Ridge and Allegheny Mountains that border the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. Your car pulls into the parking lot closest to the residence hall you will call home this year. If you are like most Baldwin women, your favorite part of returning each fall is seeing friends again. You've done this before; you won't spend much time unpacking — at least not now. You're out the door, meeting friends, checking out your old, familiar campus. But wait ... something has changed.

While you were away, the staff of the college was making some exciting changes on campus. It doesn't take long for news to travel about a new place to hang out at Pearce Science Center. The long-underused former greenhouse has been transformed into a coffeehouse, The Greenhouse Café, and is now another great place for making connections — meeting with friends, talking informally with faculty members, reading something that transports you while you sip a cup of coffee.

If you are a new student (freshmen or transfer student), you will feel at home from the moment you open the car door in the parking lot, greeted, as you will be, by the genuinely friendly orientation student committee members ready to help you move in. The people, the campus, the city, college life — everything is new. But not for long. You don't have time to ponder anything because the orientation team has plans for you and a jam-packed schedule: campus tours, a performance at world-renowned Blackfriars Playhouse in Staunton as well as other special events, meetings with your advisors and mentors, all in the company of other new students — first friendships in the making. What you will soon learn is that this creative orientation is just the beginning. You now have at your disposal the Mary Baldwin College Advantage, which is outlined in Composing Our Future.

Returning students, in the act of helping freshmen move in, note real changes in the freshmen residence halls, Woodson and Spencer. Check out the newly painted interior. Love the new furniture in the lounges.

As a student, faculty or staff member, alumnus, or friend at Mary Baldwin in years to come, you may see changes inspired by the new campus master plan like a Greenhouse Café or a reading room on the outdoor terrace of Grafton Library. Or you might see surveyors on campus mapping out the new walking trail that will loop and connect the campus. Don't be surprised if some of the administrative office locations changed; that may be part of the necessary domino-effect, i.e. this must move before that can be built. Year by year, you will see ongoing and necessary upgrades to technology (a security system in the library, new equipment in classrooms), facilities (paint, column repair, stairwell improvements) and more. All changes that must be funded.

Whatever the first changes you note on campus, they all lead us into the college's future, headed for the bicentennial in 2042.

What Might Be the Students' Favorite New Feature on Campus?

RENDERING CREATED BY GEIER BROWN RENFROW ARCHITECTS.

IMAGINE. You are back to Mary Baldwin College after Spring Break. Everyone's face reflects the quiet joy of a new season arriving. It is spring in Staunton. The trees are budding, the flowering bulbs peek above ground, and lawn mowers roar to life again. It is natural to head to the new Student Life Core (see magazine cover) to see your friends and find out what's happening on campus. What a difference the Student Life Core has made in uniting what once seemed like four distinct campuses.

From the front entrance of Hunt Dining Hall, you can look out onto several of Mary Baldwin College's signature buildings, a manicured expanse of lawn, and into the heart of the city of Staunton. In previous years, few things were picturesque about the view from the back of Hunt. The campus master plan changed that.

Creating a central area for student life — including social activities, dining, offices for student organizations and services, and student life staff — was a priority. The college started with smaller projects (re-use of existing space and landscaping) before completing the master plan's vision of a student life core with the funding made possible through generous supporters. The power of those gifts allowed the college to create:

A Campus Green: At the pedestrian crossroads of campus, a circular courtyard replaces the road that cut through the center of campus and the parking lots once behind Hunt. The space is now designed for pedestrians, outdoor activities, and is surrounded by student life functions.

An expanded Hunt Dining Hall: Now a 10,000-square-foot, two-story wing has been added at the back of the building, facing the Campus Green. On one level, a new kitchen was added and the old kitchen became a food court. The upper (mezzanine) level features a new entrance to the building from the Campus Green and includes space for student functions. An elevator provides access to the entire building.

A restored Rose Terrace: Offices for the dean of students, student life, residence life, and multicultural affairs were relocated here, after restoration of this historic building in the heart of the student life core.

A new use for Little House: An office and meeting space for the Student Government Association now reside in historic Little House (once the guest inn for young men visiting students on campus, among other uses).

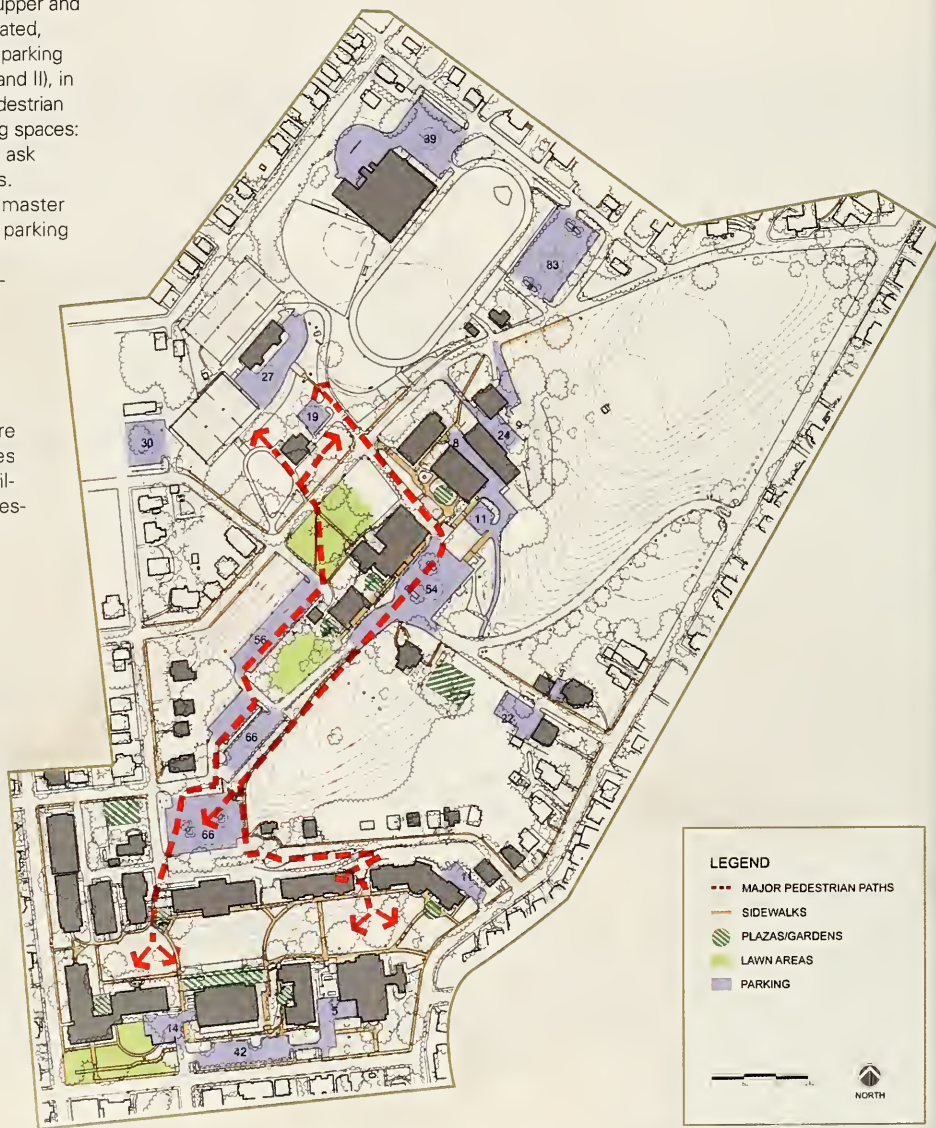

A reorganized Wenger: Chapel and Registrar's Office stayed where they were. Computer and language labs were moved to SAC, once it was converted to academic space. Computer Information Systems (CIS) moved to the vacated lab spaces, and student support services now occupy the old CIS space. Student services include the Career Center, Writing Center, and Learning Skills Center. The college chaplain, international program, and honors program are now conveniently housed in Wenger as well.

A new Student Activity Center: It was part of the long-term plan, but with donations that came in record amounts and in such a short time, the college constructed a 40,000-square-foot student center to the back and right of Hunt. The multi-function building houses the college bookstore, meeting and office space for student clubs, general meeting rooms, student commons, recreation and lounge space, and a larger chapel. It is now the very heart and soul of a unified student life core.

What About Parking?

If the road that now climbs through the middle of upper and lower campus is eliminated, along with the student parking areas (known as Sky I and II), in favor of landscaped pedestrian walkways and gathering spaces: "Where will we park?" ask many current students.

The new campus master plan reveals that new parking will surround Cannon Hill and the new walking loop, which will extend from Hunt Dining Hall and unite all four current campuses. Net result of parking changes? There will be 30 more spaces than are currently available, and in more accessible locations.

Spectacular: Wellness and Athletics Center

IMAGINE. Year by year, parents, alumnae/i, students, and faculty grew ever more supportive of Mary Baldwin's expanding athletics program, attending NCAA Division III basketball games even while still in the aging Physical Activities Center, and watching soccer and softball games on the fields. They cheered the sportswomen on the tennis court outside and the volleyball court inside. Now, with the completion of the Athletic and Wellness Center, people in the community surrounding the college have increasingly joined in to cheer on student teams.

The new 70,000-square-foot facility features a competition court with seats for 400 and a swimming pool on the lower level. The fitness center is second to none, as is the aerobics and dance room, which is near the free-weight training room, and one floor away from classrooms. The college has never before had enough room for those things, as well as team rooms, locker rooms, offices, and all-important storage space in a single building.

Wellness, a key initiative in the Mary Baldwin College Advantage, has found a headquarters in the new facility. All MBC students come to the Athletic and Wellness Center for classes, seminars, and special project work in areas of personal wellness — nutrition, stress management, support groups, yoga, tai chi, and introductions to a range of fitness options (swimming, cardio, free weights, dancing, and a recreational indoor track). All in all, the spectacular new facility has taken center stage.

The new center now offers much-needed space as a rain location for important ceremonies like Charter Day, Founders Day, alumnae/i Reunion activities — even Apple Day (bobbing for apples takes on new meaning with a swimming pool). The community has found many uses for the facility's meeting spaces as well, and the college's Board of Trustees particularly likes meeting on center court.

The Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership — still the only all-female corps of cadets in the nation — has built a large cheering section within the MBC community, whether they parade on the field or inside the new center, meet national dignitaries or the media. Those 6 a.m. winter drills and parade practice are a bit less rigorous when conducted indoors. Cadets are a constant presence in the athletic and wellness center; training and staying fit enables them to ace their physical requirements.

Spectacular facilities take special funding. It took every member of every one of Mary Baldwin's constituencies to raise this roof. But that was true for every step, every brick, every can of paint, every repaired column and restored residence hall described in the campus master plan created in 2006 and now completed. In the end, the best outcome of the campus master plan may be the bond that will exist forever among the friends and supporters of Mary Baldwin College for the difference they made in bringing the plan to life. ▲

The written pieces in this section about the new campus master plan were developed and conceived by Editor and Assistant Editor Carol Larson and Dawn Medley. Some of the material and all the drawings were taken from the document, Transforming Our Environment 1842–2042. We spoke with Ann Gordon Abbott Evans '65, outgoing president of the Mary Baldwin College Alumnae/i Association just after Reunion 2006. Her term has been eventful, almost revolutionary in changes and progress. She officially passes her gavel to the next president July 1, 2006.

Everyone seems to be talking about Class Leadership — what is it?

It offers structure for conducting the considerable business of our Alumnae/i Association. It seeks greater involvement and engagement of alumnae/i with leaders from each class — president, vice president, secretary, and annual fund coordinator — who will operate in addition to the existing Alumnae/i Association Board of Directors.

Why do you feel the new structure is so important?

Even as President Fox and the college's Board of Trustees led the creation of the 10-year strategic plan, Composing Our Future, it was clear the plan's success would be tied to the engagement and support of our alumnae/i. The Class Leadership Initiative, adopted and fully supported by the Alumnae/i Board, is an effort to do just that.

Tell us about the Class Leadership Conference.

In April 2006, a selected group of alumnae from the classes celebrating reunions in 2007 and 2008 were invited to campus for extensive updates on all aspects of the college. They learned about Class Leadership and elected officers for each class. We will continue to add classes to the structure with each Reunion year.

Your term ends June 30. What are some of the highlights of your time in office?

I would have to say the annual Continuing Education Weekend is an important opportunity for our alumnae/i. It offers alumnae an experience that can only come from returning to the college we love. I highly recommend that all alumnae/i plan to attend the next one, scheduled for October 27-29, 2006.

It has been a joy to work with students in STARS (Student Alumnae Relations Society). They work hand in hand with the Alumnae/i Board on events and sponsor activities on campus to increase student awareness of our association.

The planning of the Class Leadership Initiative began in January 2005. When completed, it will add strength to classes as they plan reunions, coordinate local alumnae/i events, and support the Annual Fund. I hope each of our alumnae/i will find ways to become part of this initiative.

I have had the pleasure of meeting many loyal and dedicated alumnae/i at events around the country over the past two years. I will always remember them.

Another highlight has been the separation of Reunion Weekend and Commencement for the first time during 2006. The weather was beautiful, the activities varied and lively, and we received the full attention of faculty, staff, and others. It was great fun to attend current classes with today's students.

Who is your successor in this important role?

Kellie Warner '90 of Charlotte, North Carolina, assumes the presidency. She is a talented leader, an accomplished woman, and a loyal and devoted alumna to whom I offer my congratulations and best wishes for 2006-2008.

MBC Awards Outstanding Alumnae at Reunion

■ Career Achievement Award

Sarah Mack Lawson-Brumit '66 of Banner Elk, North Carolina, was recognized for her early work as an English and creative writing teacher, and her enthusiastic role as an exercise physiologist. After teaching in Atlanta, Georgia for several years, Brumit returned to the classroom in the master's program in exercise physiology at Georgia State University, and changed career fields. She worked as an exercise physiologist at Southwind Health Resort — where she authored the company's fitness manual — and served as program director of Australian Body Works in Georgia. Brumit also gave many presentations and seminars through her firm, The HealthMaker. She was a representative for Georgia to the International Association of Fitness Professionals and was recognized by that organization as one of 10 women making a difference in fitness.

Mary Ellen Brown '60 of Bloomington, Indiana, earned the Career Achievement Award for her long tenure as an educator, primarily at Indiana University and Indiana State University. Brown earned her master's and doctoral degrees at University of Pennsylvania and began her career as assistant professor of English at Indiana State University in 1970. She taught folklore, women's studies, and English at Indiana University for 30 years and became professor emerita upon her retirement in 2003. Brown also served as a visiting tutor at Edinburgh University's School of Scottish Studies, and was awarded a Guggenheim Foundation Fellowship in 2004 and a Fulbright Research Fellowship in 1998, among other honors. Brown is the author and editor of several books on folklore and Scottish ballads and authors, and she has published dozens of scholarly articles and chapters in books.

■ Emily Wirsing Kelly Awards

Artist and former Alumnae/i Association Board of Directors President Emily Wirsing Kelly '63 exemplified the Mary Baldwin spirit of leadership and thoughtful creativity. Kelly passed away in 1985, and her husband, Timothy Kelly, established a leadership award and a student scholarship in her memory through the Kelly Foundation.

Emily Wirsing Kelly Leadership Award

Sara Nair James '69 of Staunton, Virginia, was acknowledged for many years of service in leadership positions at Mary Baldwin College and for her support of local educational and arts organizations. James, professor of art history, has served on the Honor Scholars Committee, Inaugural Committee for President Pamela Fox, and the Educational Policy Committee, among others, since she began at Mary Baldwin in 1991. In the local community, James is involved with Historic Staunton Foundation, Staunton-Augusta Arts Center, Trinity Episcopal Church, and other organizations. She has been an active member of the parents councils at the schools and colleges that her children attended.

Emily Wirsing Kelly Scholarship

Jessica Rene Baker Brydge '07 of Lyndhurst, Virginia, earned this scholarship for her commitment to make connections between her studio practice, art history, and art criticism as a studio art major with an emphasis in painting. Brydge's natural talent as a painter is complemented by her diligent work ethic and efforts to meld different disciplines.

■ Virginia L. Lester Scholarship

Erin Marie Baker '07 of Roanoke, Virginia, received this scholarship for academic excellence and leadership as a Mary Baldwin College student. Baker is a member of the Student Alumnae/i Relations Society, and was recently inducted into Omicron Delta Kappa, a prestigious national leadership honor society. The award is named for the college's seventh president.

■ Service to Church Award

Ann Shaw Miller '54 of Raleigh, North Carolina, was honored for her long and varied service to Tabernacle Baptist Church in Raleigh. Now in her second term as deacon for that church, Miller has also worked with Tabernacle's prison death row ministry and homebound ministry, and served as an adult Sunday school teacher. Among the roles closest to her heart is her work as media director for the church, through which she continues to develop a large multi-media collection and was instrumental in creating a 2,800-square-foot media library.

■ Service to Community Award

Kay Hundley Fisher '61 of San Francisco, California, was recognized for community service efforts that range from raising funds for schools in Africa to supporting medical centers and children's organizations around the country and the world. Fisher was one of the founders and remains an active member of The Rafiki Friends Foundation in California, which supports education and wildlife preservation in Africa. Fisher's long history of dedication to helping others also led her to establish a battered women's shelter and a program to assist people who accompany trauma victims on life flights. She has served with the Junior League of San Francisco and Save the Children. Fisher received a national outstanding volunteer award in 1975. She was also a member of the MBC Advisory Board of Visitors in the 1990s.

Heather Smith Harvison '93 of Baltimore, Maryland, was lauded for her work in founding and directing My Sister's Circle, a nonprofit organization that provides intensive academic and social mentoring for middle-school girls. Starting with six girls in 2000, Harvison founded My Sister's Circle in 2000, which grew to 30 girls and 50 mentors by 2003, when it was the subject of a feature article in Baltimore Magazine. The organization has helped several students obtain full scholarships to private schools. The young women are "being exposed to so many different activities that they would never otherwise have a chance to do," according to Baltimore Principal Irma Johnson. In 2005, Harvison was awarded the Excellence in Mentoring Award by the Maryland Mentoring Partnership.

■ Emily Smith Medallion

Sally Cheney Walker '40 was honored posthumously and will be remembered for her enthusiastic melding of artistic talents with volunteer service, and for her work for the MBC Alumnae/i Office. Walker's love of art, horticulture, and community service is clear in a partial list of organizations to which she belonged: Garden Club of America, Native Plant Society of Texas, Sunshine Cottage School for Deaf Children, and San Antonio Art League. In her later years, Walker's abstract paintings were featured in several solo and group shows, and she was named San Antonio Art League's Artist of the Year in 2004. She served as chair of the MBC alumnae/i chapter in San Antonio and co-chair of her 55th reunion in 1995 and was a loyal supporter of MBC.

Morrison '95 Rounds Up World Leaders

Mary Morrison '95 wants people to know that the Clinton Global Initiative (CGI) is more than a glitzy annual event. "It is an ongoing partnership of global leaders who are working together on some of the world's most pressing challenges," said Morrison, CGI director of membership. She is employed by the William J. Clinton Foundation, which supports CGI — "a non-partisan endeavor, bringing together a carefully selected group of the world's best minds and most distinguished problem solvers to focus on practical, effective measures that can be taken now."

It doesn't hurt to be in the public eye, however, as she was when the organization's kickoff event earned her recognition as one of New York City's event planners of the year. Morrison recently received that honor from BizBash Magazine for planning the "three-day assembly of world leaders, business execs, nonprofit agencies, Nobel Laureates, and issue-minded celebrities." Among the participants at the CGI event were Kofi Annan, secretary general of the United Nations; former Secretary of State Madeline Albright; George Stephanopoulos, anchor of ABC News This Week; and actress Angelina Jolie.

As an MBC student, Morrison designed an independent major in international business. An internship in the Clinton White House after graduation set her on her career path. She went to work as deputy director of Oval Office operations, and remained on Clinton's staff when he left office. She signed on in April 2004 to manage the CGI conference. The daughter of a retired career naval officer and Brazilian painter, Morrison lives in midtown Manhattan, just blocks from her office.

In classes with Mary Baldwin professors such as the late Gordon Hammock, Morrison said she learned organization, honesty, preparation, and fundamental kindness — that voice that reminds her to write thank-you notes and respond to requests. These serve her well on the CGI staff and beyond. Morrison "did a little bit of everything" for the inaugural CGI conference in September 2005, including choosing the food and the florist, and coordinating the name and logo. For this year's conference, she is focused on membership: The organization boasts nearly 1,000 members, and Morrison works to carefully recruit new faces — primarily heads of state from around the world.

Still, she is humble about her newfound recognition: "It was exciting. It was a nice prize at the end of a year of hard work to get the event organized. But really, the event itself was the reward. Knowing that we helped raise $2.5 billion toward mitigating global issues and that we encouraged conversation is immensely satisfying."

For more information about the Clinton Global Initiative, Morrison recommends visiting the organization online at www.clintonglobalinitiative.org.

Gifts of the Desert

Among the many gifts of the high desert are sunrises and sunsets, especially sunsets. One sunset, early in my rookie days as a volunteer at the Rainbow Forest Museum in the Petrified Forest National Park, came after a threatened thunderstorm at the tail end of the rainy season. It was more spectacular than anything I had ever seen, a 360-degree panorama of swirling blues and pinks in constant motion with a blazing red finale. I was on my way to my apartment after work and just stopped along side the road with several law enforcement rangers. No one said anything.

The park rangers were beginning their evening rounds at the entrance to the Blue Mesa Trail, the midway point along the park highway, to secure the premises for the night, to protect the national park's most precious asset, petrified wood, from thieving tourists. The Petrified Forest holds the country's preatest concentration of petrified wood, which are trees that have turned into rainbow-colored stone.

Many of us who live east of the Mississippi River do not have a clear picture of where the Petrified Forest is located. Those of us who do find it in the northeast corner of Arizona are usually on our way to or from the Grand Canyon. The Petrified Forest is huge in the space it covers, 100 square miles, and vast in the period it interprets — 250 million years. It is shaped like a squared-up, buxomed hourglass. In the north end, the badlands, one finds the Painted Desert Visitor Center and the Painted Desert Inn. In the south end there are massive log jams of petrified wood and the Rainbow Forest Museum. In between are Indian ruins on the Puerco River, remnants of Route 66, the Blue Mesa where the Painted Desert changes into violet and white shades of volcanic dust, the teepees, the petroglyphs at Newspaper Rock, and burying grounds of dinosaurs and pre-dinosaurs with names only nine-year-olds can pronounce.

How do trees turn to stone? It was the most logical and persistent curiosity of visitors to the Petrified Forest. Briefly, it happened as a result of an elaborate and complicated chemical process which needed the right combination of ingredients and circumstances — a forest of downed trees, slow moving flood waters loaded with fragile silica molecules from volcanic ash — as well as time — lots of time.

As a volunteer, I worked 40 hours a week in one of three museums. During my time off, I hiked marked paths and gained enough confidence to wander off-trail into the back country. Nothing was as rewarding as my first solo trek into the Painted Desert several weeks after I had arrived.

My goals, other than returning alive, were to explore the badlands and walk the desert floor among the bentonite hills and find the Onyx Bridge, an intact petrified log stretched across a ravine in one of the slot canyons in the Black Forest. Finding the bridge was a challenge and rite of passage for new rangers and volunteers.

Before starting, I planned my route from Kachina Point. From that vantage I saw red: large, striated beehive-like hills of some shade and intensity of a crimson hue, the color broken and eased with white and brown layers. The giant mounds are remains of volcanic spewings; the ash had co-mingled with iron oxides, aluminum, magnesium, and whatever elements were in the atmosphere at the time of the eruptions to add the paint to the Painted Desert. I saw sandstone rock that underpinned the waves of giant hills as they rose from the desert floor and stretched for miles to the horizon. I could see evidence that the Painted Desert is disappearing because of erosion and weathering, a quarter inch each year.

I had a vague notion of the way to the elusive stone bridge. The landmarks looked obvious from up above — the curve in the Lithodendrum Wash, the rock slump at twelve o'clock, the route through the red mounded hills. But once down on the short, marked trail, which was a sharp treacherous descent over roly pebbles (called desert ball-bearings), I was in the badlands — by myself — surrounded by hundreds of look-alike hills. I left cairn markers to help me “home.” I didn’t come near the Onyx Bridge ... that time. I made a few wrong turns but found my way back and was glad to have soloed in the wilderness.

I recorded this and every adventure I had during my days out west in my journal. Keeping field notes and writing in my journal became one of the most important things I did while I was away; it was like talking to myself and has had the great benefit of holding this place in my mind.

When it was my turn to be keeper of the Painted Desert Inn, I had an unobstructed picture-window postcard view of the Painted Desert. The inn is both an architectural jewel and a maintenance nightmare. A portion of its foundation had been constructed on top of the soft clay which expanded to seven times its volume when wet and contracted when dry. Over the 80-plus years of its life, it had shifted and cracked, and been patched and re-patched. The flat roof had sprung leaks, and water threatened to destroy delicate interior murals. By late 2003, it was scheduled for closure again, this time for serious maintenance using modern engineering to stop leaks, shore up its foundation, and repair gaping cracks in the walls.

As a park service volunteer my insider status allowed me the opportunity and time to examine the fine details of the Painted Desert Inn and to go on field trips with expert rangers. Ranger Rita took several of us to Mountain Lion Mesa on a fossil hunt. Our prize find was an exquisite arrowhead chipped from a sliver of petrified wood. Ranger Ted led volunteers on day-long individual tours into the wilderness. The highlight of that outing was a terrifying scramble down a steep ravine to the site of the latest find in the park — a phytosaur skull.

It amuses me to think about my limited expectations of the Petrified Forest National Park before I left Virginia. I had no idea what awaited me in the barren wasteland of volcanic ash that is the Painted Desert. By the end of my short odyssey at the Petrified Forest, I wanted to live every minute over again. My time in the high desert of Arizona has become a gift to me. ▲

Doenges Visiting Scholar/Artist 2006–07

September 19, 2006

Claudia Bernardi, the 2006–07 Elizabeth Kirkpatrick Doenges Visiting Artist, is a native of Argentina who works not only as an artist, but as a human rights activist and forensic anthropologist. "Bernardi's artwork is inspired by suffering, yet infused with life. Drawing upon experiences of state terror — such as the exhumation of mass graves in Central America — the artist's challenge is to resurrect beauty amid the bloodshed and in doing so, to refuse to succumb to the silencing embrace of political repression," said Angelina Snodgrass Godroy of the Center for Latin American Studies at the University of California, Berkeley. Bernardi will be on Mary Baldwin's campus in September when the films Pasa Un Angel and Artist of Resistance will be presented. Both films document her life as an artist and activist. She will return in May 2007 to teach a May Term course. Keep watch on the college's lecture site for up-to-date information, www.mbc.edu/college/events/lectures.asp.
